Celebrating the important role of parents in student achievement

Nyasja Brown

Philip Livingston Magnet Academy

Nyasja had two students at Philip Livingston Magnet Academy during the 2008-09 school year. She often was at school to support her children. She always was available and invested in doing what's best for her children. She is a wonderful advocate for her children and is admired for her forthright attitude, honesty and endless support.

“Parents should be in their kids’ lives because it will better them in the future. Parents have that sense of guidance that kids feel, and it makes them want to strive to do better. Students need parents that they can depend on if they need help in school. A lot of kids get left behind because their parents are not involved enough.”
